Dear Sir:

In your issue of July 11, 1957, I notice that you give an editorial plug for the "National Guardian." I happen to know that that is an easily recognizable Communist sheet. This is the first time you have given away your hand.

Prof Plight At Ole Miss

Thirty-one top-level faculty members have resigned at the University of Mississippi during the past 12 months to accept positions at other colleges in other states.

That's almost one-third the total of full and associate professors at the university. Four were department heads. Many had been teaching there for 10 years or longer.

What's the explanation?

Low pay and lack of academic freedom, the departing educators say.

And the low pay seems to arouse less resentment among the departing faculty members than the gradual death of academic freedoms that once seemed to exist in at least some reasonable degree.

These matters were discussed recently in a series of articles by the Greenville Delta Democrat — Times.

Ole Miss has never been what might be called a "liberal" institution, but at least there was a time when faculty members could express themselves — and even disagree with popular concepts — without fear of some crackpot hollering "radical" and demanding an investigation and dismissal.

We also recall a pre-Kershaw era when it was possible to have speakers at various forums who would deal with both sides of controversial questions.

It was then that the student with an inquiring mind could study, weigh facts and statistics, hear all sides, and arrive at conclusions without censorship or coercion — even though these conclusions might be that the older folks are wrong in some of the beliefs they cling to.

That was as it should be. That's what universities are

Dear Mr. Dusinbere:

As requested in your letter of August 2nd, your subcripton will be discontinue as of this date.

I am indeed sorry about this, believe me. I will not try to reason with you in this matter, because as Dean Swift said "You cannot reason a man out of something he was not reasoned into." If your obvious conclusion was the result of reason then should I mention the Talmud I would then be a Jew. And by this reasoning process should I mention the new Testament I would then be a Christian, the Wall Street Journal would make me a Capitalist, and the Democrat Digest would make me a Democrat.

As to my having shown my hand, this is not the first time by any means that I have done so. It's been going on now for about thirty-five years. But how can you know that? I wish to submit that in reading my exposed palm you might have mistaken the Commie line for ignorance. Perhaps you recognize the Guardian as Communist; ignorant as I am, I didn't. I have only your word for the fact; facts, after all, are relative, and actually boil down to an opinion. To your view you are entitled. I confess complete and total ignorance to the policy of the paper.

As to matters RED, my only interest in the color was, as a child, I had a wagon that color. (I presume they're now painting them blue.) Later I had a red necktie, but not wearing neckties, I wasn't especially interested in it. However, should they begin to print U. S. currency with red ink, my interest will be great, I assure you. Other than those limited interests, I have none.

Of course, I could be a Commie. Definitions vary, and there is the ever-present curse of "guilt by association." And I've associated with some questionable persons, like Socrates, Plato, Christ, Voltaire, Jefferson, Paine, and others.

However, I would like to make clear this: If I am a Commie, I'm the most Capitalistic damned Commie you'll ever run into.

Sincerely,
P. D. East

academic freedoms that once seemed to exist in at least some reasonable degree.

These matters were discussed recently in a series of articles by the Greenville Delta Democrat — Times.

Ole Miss has never been what might be called a "liberal" institution, but at least there was a time when faculty members could express themselves — and even disagree with popular concepts — without fear of some crackpot hollering "radical" and demanding an investigation and dismissal.

We also recall a pre-Kershaw era when it was possible to have speakers at various forums who would deal with both sides of controversial questions.

It was then that the student with an inquiring mind could study, weigh facts and statistics, hear all sides, and arrive at conclusions without censorship or coercion — even though these conclusions might be that the older folks are wrong in some of the beliefs they cling to.

That was as it should be. That's what universities are for. There the groundwork is laid for the "big idea" which the late, great Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes said "sometimes dawns in a man's mind and st tches it so that it never shrinks back again to its former porportions."

There seems little of that atmosphere left.

Every time some faculty member or student happens to disagree publicly with the policies or ideas of some of the more backward members of our state legislature he gets his toes stepped on.

Latest incident involves Dean Farley of the university law school.

One of our legislators, Rep. Zealous Polk, has demanded that the governor and university trustees "do something about that fellow."

What was Dean Farley guilty of?

Along with other law school educators and leading attorneys throughout the nation, he had signed a document urging respect for the US Supreme Court, whether or not we disagree with its decisions.

Then there is the matter of the so-far unsuccessful attempt to purge the university library shelves of all books about Negroes.

Only one thing appears certain in the situation. If it continues, we'll add another 48th to our already well-established record among the states. That will be for the university.

The World Of Nature

By John M. Frazier

By John M. Frazier

The human race has thousands of friends among the insects. We usually hear much less about these friends than we do about our insect enemies. There are approximately 700,000 known and described species. It has been estimated that 10 per cent of these are helpful.

A higher percentage may be considered harmful, either directly or indirectly. It is the harmful group that gives the whole insect world a bad reputation. Many books have been published and much more has been said in magazine and journal articles and in newspapers about our insect pests.

We have, as a nation, spent multiplied millions of dollars in fighting our six-legged foes. The extermination of the mediterranean fruit fly is an example of what has been done. Some can be exterminated; some cannot, but may be kept under control. Many of our worst enemies are introduced forms. Representatives of this group include the boll weevil, the Japanese beetle, the white-fringed beetle, the Hessian fly and many others.

Our friends counter balance this loss by the great benefit they bring in their quiet, and frequently unnoticed diligence. Honeybees and silg worms are cared for by their owners but there are many other species that serve as dili-

For The First Time

The civil rights debate in Congress brings to mind an interesting bit of American history. Back in 1865, the Negroes of North Carolina petitioned President Andrew Johnson for the right to vote. Their plea is recorded in a fascinating book, (Pictorial History of the Negro in America, written by Langston Hughes and Milton Meltzer, Crown Publishers, $5.95):

"In many respects we are poor and greatly despised by our fellowmen; but we are rich in the possession of the liberty brought us, and our wives and our little ones."

As Hugnes and Meltzer point out, this was the first time since slavery was introduced in America that Negro wives belonged to husbands, and the little ones — children of these former slaves — belonged to their parents and not to some master. Now marriages among Negroes could be solemnized and legalized. Now when Negroes worked they were to be paid, and the money received was theirs to budget, spend wisely or squander as they wished.

As one old Negro put it:

"What I likes best, to be slave or free? Well, it's this way. In slavery I owns nothing and never owns nothing. In freedom I owns the house and raise the family. All that causes me worriation — and in slavery I has no worriation — BUT I TAKES THE FREEDOM."

TRUE BLUE

Inez Robb, nationally-syndicated newspaper columnist, recently offered a composite portrait of those citizens who send her indignant letters signed "True Blue American," "Old-Fashioned Patriot" or "Red-Blooded American." "True Blue," Miss Robb indicates, is a firm advocate of the brotherhood of man for everyone — except Catholics, Jews, Negroes and foreigners.

He believes in freedom of speech — For everyone who agrees with him; all others, of course, are subversives.

He believes in freedom of the press—for publications that mirror his views; the others, naturally are "Communit."

"True Blue's" letters are always sealed with a sticker that reads "Get the U. S. out of the UN; Get the UN out of the U.S." And he now thinks the Hungarian Freedom Fighters were just lousy opportunists, probably put up to it all by the Commies, in order to get their agents into the United States.

Oh yes — Miss Robb reports one more prominent characteristic of "Ture Blue." His surname is always Anonymous.

DESEGREGATION COMING

When a Southern Democratic leader says that Louisiana and all other Southern state will eventually desegregate their public schools, that's news. This was the prediction made recently by Camille F. Gravel, Jr., an came from White Citizens Councils. "Not one of the 101 members of the Democratic State Central Committee suggested I resign as national committeeman," he added.

"It undoubtebly will take a long time," said Gravel, "for the states in the Deep South to work out the formula necessary to comply with the Supreme Court decree, and I am sure there will be considerable experimentation in fringe areas which will set the pattern for desegregation." But, he declared, desegregation is sure to come.

ALONG FREEDOM ALLEY

When Local 38 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers denied membership to electrician Theodore Pinkston, it started a whole series of chain reactions. Cleveland's Community Relations Board, claiming that Pinkston was barred because he was a Negro, appealed to AFL-CIO President George Meany for help. Meany, together with Gordon Freeman, IBEW president, met with officers of Local 38 and gave them until July 1st to cease its discriminatory acts. The Local then gave exeminations to five Negro applicants to test their craft skills. Three passed the test and were admitted into membership. Ironically, Pinkston failed the test. But he expressed pleasure that his efforts enabled three other men to win union cards.

Despite pressure from the States' Rights Council of Georgia the Atlanta Community Chest has announced that it will continue to support the Atlanta Urban League. Calling charges against the Urban League "baseless," William C. Wardlaw, president of the Community Chest, said its study committee "recognized the Atlanta Urban League and its influence as a major influence in maintaining good race relations in the metropolitan Atlanta area."

When Horatio Alger said, "if at first you don't succeed . . . try

DESEGREGATION COMING

When a Southern Democratic leader says that Louisiana and all other Southern state will eventually desegregate their public schools, that's news. This was the prediction made recently by Camille F. Gravel, Jr., an Alexandria lawyer and Democratic national committeeman for Louisiana.

At a national Democratic Advisory Council meeting in San Francisco, Gravel voted for a civil rights resolution and called segregation "morally indefensible."

Out of a total of 72 letters commenting on his action, Gravel reported 54 commened his stand. Of the 18 unfavorable letters, 14 admitted into membership. Ironically, Pinkston failed the test. But he expressed pleasure that his efforts enabled three other men to win union cards.

Despite pressure from the States' Rights Council of Georgia the Atlanta Community Chest has announced that it will continue to support the Atlanta Urban League. Calling charges against the Urban League "baseless," William C. Wardlaw, president of the Community Chest, said its study committee "recognized the Atlanta Urban League and its influence as a major influence in maintaining good race relations in the metropolitan Atlanta area."

When Horatio Alger said, "if at first you don't succeed, try, try again," he must have been thinking of San Francisco unionists. Last month, after four successive failures, San Francisco labor and civic groups won passage of the first fair employment practices ordinance in the state. The new law, opposed by the California Association of Employers, makes it illegal for employers or unions to discriminate in hiring, promotion and em-

Inventing Inventions

So the Russians claim they invented aeroplanes, baseball, bicycles, radio and rocket ships. But who cares? They didn't invent vodka.

The July issue of HOTEL & CLUB VOICE gives us the latest scoop. Seems, according to Herman Schwarz of Publicker Distillers, that long before Columbus discovered America, the ancient Peruvians were brewing a potent potato drink called "chakta." Before the 1000 the Peruvians had exported this part of their culture to North America, and when Leif Ericson explored the east coast of the North American continent he brought back to Scandinavia the technique for making chakta or vodka. The Russians picked up the distilling art from the Norsemen, at first using wheat, rye, oats and barley for their vodka, because the potato did not reach Russia until late in the 18th century. Today, the potato is the chief ingredient of Russian vodka.

And, of course, if you drink enough vodka, you too can get into a rosy enough haze to feel certain you've invented aeroplanes, baseball, bicycles, radio and rocket ships!

Nature . . .

gently without any care whatsoever from their benefactors.

Direct Benefits

From time beyond the memory and record of man, bees have been producing honey. This is one of man's most delicious foods. It is nature's best sweet. The production of honey is now an extensive industry. Millions of pounds are put on the market each year.

The beeswax industry is of much less importance, but has its values in the manufacture of shoes and other leather products.

The production of queen bees for the market is an important phase of the beekeeping industry. The queens are necessary for the honey production and the pollination process.

The silk worm industry is of no great significance in this country, but we depend on foreign countries for our pure silk supply. In countries like China and France, silk production is a major industry.

There is a direct medical use made of the larvae of certain flies to eat the dead tissue from certain types of wounds, particularly burns and bruised and lacerated tissue. This is practiced in the case of accidents.

Pollination

Perhaps the greatest service rendered mankind by insects is the simple act of pollinating the flowers of the plants we use for food and clothing. Without pollination, we would have no fruits on plants having showy and fragrant flowers. This is indeed a very extensive list and of such vital importance that the human race would cease to live on the earth without them.

We depend more on honeybees for pollinating the cultivated plants than on any other species. A good example of the value of honeybees in fruit production is noted in two 40 acre apple orchards in Colorado a few years ago. At the age of 7 and 8 years one orchard was yielding good crops and the other none. When a specialist was consulted, he examined both orchards and pointed out that the bearing orchard had honeybee hives in it, which the other did not have. This situation was corrected and good yields were produced thereafter.

The crop of red clover seed depends almost entirely on the presence of bumblebees. If bumblebees were all destroyed, red clover would probably pass from the earth.

These are our best pollinators. Of the 86,000 known species of insects in the United States, the number that help by carrying pollen would be several hundred.

Predators

A predator is an animal that captures its prey alive and devours it fresh. We have many friends among this group because they destroy many of our enemies.

There are about 10,000 species of insects in the United States that are considered major pests. We need much help from all quarters to keep them under control. Our predators do their share of this work with little of no encouragement from us.

Our predator friends usually have large bodies. Their motions are usually quick and decisive. There are some small species which have special devices for defense of themselves and offense in attacking their prey.

Among the larger insect predators are the dragonflies, some having a wing spread of six inches or more. The robberflies are as much as two inches long. These, along with hornets and net-winged midges, capture their food on the wing.

FHA Convention Is Underway At Purdue
